

The Scene

Young Friends of NMAJH “Midsummer’s Eve” Dance

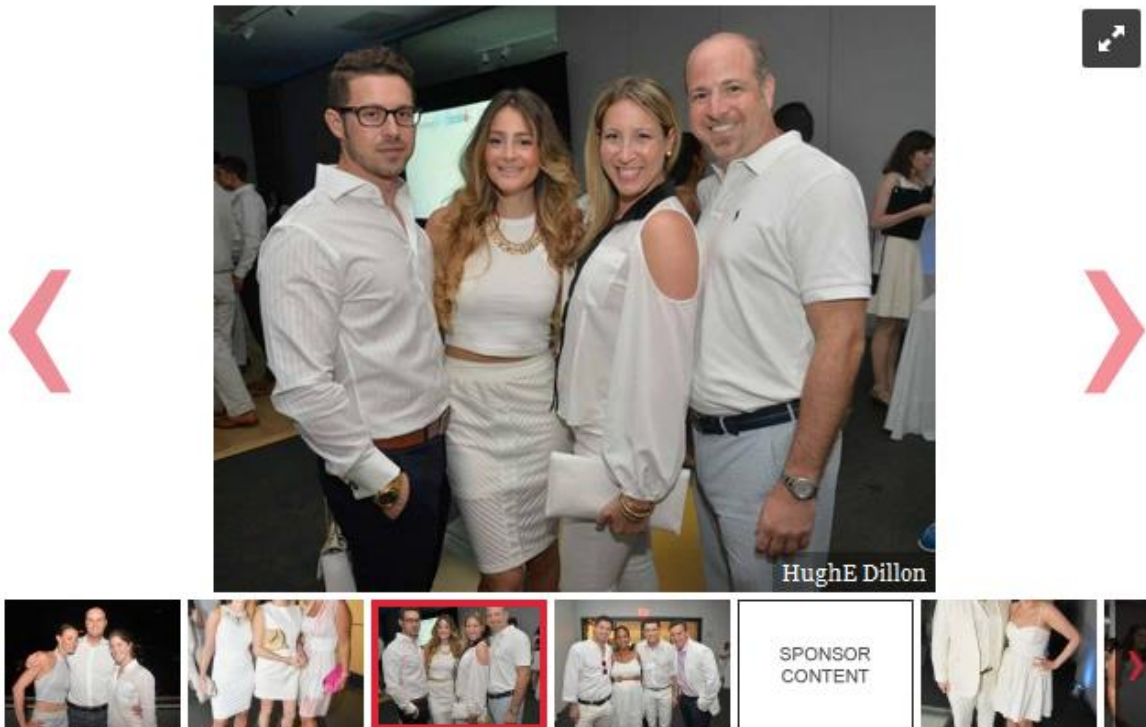

Guests wore white in the spirit of Tu B’Av, the Jewish holiday of love.

BY HUGHE DILLON | AUGUST 5, 2015 AT 5:00 PM

HughE Dillon

The Young Friends of the National Museum of American Jewish History (NMAJH) presented A Midsummer's Eve at the museum on July 30th. Guests wore white in the spirit of the holiday tradition while enjoying a kosher dessert reception by Betty the Caterer and an open bar. The event — a celebration of Tu B'Av, the Jewish holiday of love — was held in the ballroom at the NMAJH, which overlooks Independence Park. Guest mingled with other young friends, posed for photos in front of the step-and-repeat, enjoyed views from the expansive fifth floor terrace, danced to the tunes of DJ Adrian Hardy and checked out the Richard Avedon: Family Affairs portraiture exhibit, which ended its run on August 2nd.

From left: Jordan Katz, Jennifer Brown, Courtney Katz and Justin Wineburgh.

HughE Dillon covers parties, events and more for Philadelphia magazine's The Scene. You can follow him on Twitter at @iPhillyChitChat and visit his daily online social diary PhillyChitChat.com.