THE NATIONAL MUSEUM OF AMERICAN JEWISH HISTORY—A WELCOMING SPACE FOR ALL—LAUNCHES FOREIGN-LANGUAGE VISITOR GUIDES

Visitor Guides now available in Chinese, Hebrew, Korean, Russian, and Spanish

PHILADELPHIA—The National Museum of American Jewish History (NMAJH) is pleased to announce the launch of Visitor Guides in multiple foreign languages. The printed pamphlet is now available in Chinese, Hebrew, Korean, Russian, and Spanish, with additional languages in progress. The Visitor Guides provide general information about the Museum, details about each floor of the core exhibition, and a must-see guide for visitors who are short on time.

“As a Museum that celebrates the contributions of immigrants to this country, and the richness in its diversity, we are mindful to make all visitors feel welcome here,” says Ivy Barsky, NMAJH’s CEO and Gwen Goodman Director. “The multilingual Visitor Guides provide another way for us to engage our audiences who come from all over the world.”

NMAJH's outreach to non-English speaking visitors extends beyond the Visitor Guides. The façade of the Museum features a large-scale sign indicating "Welcome" in fourteen different languages, and NMAJH is able to offer guided tours in Hebrew, Spanish, and several other foreign languages, with advance notice. To schedule a foreign-language tour, please contact: groups@nmajh.org / 215.923.3811 x 141.
